

President
Abraham Lincoln's
Gettysburg Address

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this Continent a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition That all men are created equal

Now we are engaged in a great civil war testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live.

It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.

It is for us, the living rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced.

It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of Freedom, and that Government of the people, by the People, for the People shall not perish from the earth

Steve Hunter honorably and nobly served His God and Country and has gone on to his reward. Now it is for us, the living, to step up to the task of carrying on the battle he was fighting and to dedicate ourselves anew and afresh to the cause—that this nation shall have a new birth of freedom and righteousness and that this nation for which Steve and millions of others have given their lives shall not perish from the earth.

Will You Make That Pledge?
